

FHA is Here to Stay

*Federally-Backed
Financing for First-Time
Homebuyers
Still a Great Option.*

FHA home loans remain an integral part of the government's efforts to help more Americans become homeowners. For borrowers with credit issues, or not much money for a down payment, FHA loans provide an alternative path on the road to homeownership.

Home prices and mortgage rates remain low, making this a great time to purchase your new home with government-backed, FHA financing. And, FHA loans are available in a variety of terms, to suit your individual needs.

Best of all, you can obtain initial financing with an FHA home loan. After making payments on time – and building your credit, and equity in your home – you'll have the option to refinance into a conventional loan, with even better rates and no mortgage insurance premium.

So if you're considering buying a home, consider getting an FHA loan and working with an expert, FHA-approved lender.
